

Responsible governance of tenure

Course: Spatial planning in the context of the responsible governance of tenure

©FAO/Giuseppe Bizzarri

The course introduces spatial planning, identifying its rationale and benefits, its key principles and the main stages in the spatial planning process. It represents a useful reference for all those who want to promote and implement spatial planning in their countries as an instrument to reconcile and harmonize different, often conflicting, public and private interests on land, fisheries and forests.

2 Hours

Available in English, French and Spanish

You will learn about

- Definition of spatial planning
- Importance of spatial planning
- Context within which spatial planning contributes to sustainable development
- Key principles that define the scope of spatial planning
- Steps of the spatial planning process
- Tasks and responsibilities at the different administrative levels

Who is the course for?

The curriculum primarily addresses “change agents” - i.e. people who can have a direct impact by introducing changes in how tenure is governed. They include national policy makers and administrators, surveyors, trainers, legal support providers, civil society and non-governmental organizations, advocacy, control and monitoring professionals.
