Rome, 13 May 2016

APPENDIX DMINISTERIAL DECLARATION ON*“FOOD SECURITY AND THE AGRICULTURAL SECTORS IN A CHANGING CLIMATE”

We, the Ministers of agriculture of NENA, recognize that climate change is a threat to our most fundamental human rights. It undermines our ability to eradicate extreme poverty and feed the world’s almost 800 million food insecure people. Over 70 percent of NENA’s poorest inhabitants live in rural areas, the majority of whom earn income from the agricultural sectors (crops, livestock, forestry, fisheries and aquaculture) and other natural resources. As a result, they are particularly vulnerable to the effects of climate change. By some estimates, climate change could increase the number of malnourished people by 600 million by 2080 unless we take immediate action. Other estimates suggest that the impact of climate change on food availability could result in an additional 500 000 deaths by 2050.

The fundamental connection between food security and climate change is reflected in two key international agreements reached in 2015.

- The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable development includes sustainable development goals (SDGs) on eradicating poverty in all its forms; ending hunger, achieving food security, improving nutrition and promoting sustainable agriculture; and taking urgent action to combat climate change and its impacts.
- The Paris Agreement on Climate Change recognizes the “fundamental priority of safeguarding food security and ending hunger, and the particular vulnerabilities of food production systems to the adverse impact of climate change”. The agreement emphasizes climate change adaptation, particularly for the world’s most vulnerable inhabitants and countries. Developed countries reiterated their commitment to channel at least USD 100 billion in annual climate finance to developing countries by 2020.

The Intended Nationally Determined Contributions (INDCs) we submitted ahead of COP21 in Paris outline our climate change policy priorities. Agriculture, forestry and land use feature prominently, reflecting the central importance of these sectors for our economies and societies. With the requisite levels of financial and technical support, we are committed to work with the international community to implement the agriculture, forestry and land use components of our INDCs.

We have a common vision that investment in productive and resilient agricultural development are vital to ensuring that our countries and particularly our poorest and most food insecure inhabitant continue to prosper in spite of climate change.

We recognize that well-targeted investments in agriculture can simultaneously improve natural resource management, and contribute to mitigating climate change by easing the pressures that drive deforestation and improving soil health. Investments in agriculture can often generate these important environmental benefits at little or no additional cost.

We encourage developed countries, private sector actors, civil society and international organizations to work with us. It will be particularly to:

- Scale up disbursement of the climate finance pledges made before and at COP21 and pledge additional resources with a view to meeting the target of channelling at least USD 100 billion in annual climate finance to developing countries by 2020;
- Increase financial and technical support for climate change adaptation, with a particular focus on the agricultural sectors and small holder agricultural producers; and
- Improve coordination when providing technical and financial support, including by aligning support with existing work
